

GUIDE TO THE TABLES

All 33 boroughs in Greater London are listed alphabetically. Schools in each area are ranked by the percentage of pupils achieving at least five A* to C grades at GCSE, including English and maths, shown in the third column. Ties are broken by the number of pupils taking exams, shown in the second column. The fourth column shows the proportion of pupils who studied physics, chemistry and biology and scored at least two Cs - including in the double science GCSE. The fifth column shows the "value added" by a school to its pupils' progress between age 11 and GCSE. This compares pupils' results in tests in English, maths and science at age 11 with their GCSE results. A score of 1000 indicates pupils have done as well as expected at GCSE, based on their achievement in the earlier tests. Above 1000, the school "adds value" to children's education. Most independent schools show no data in this column because they do not sit National Curriculum tests. Column six shows the average points score per pupil in sixth form exams, combining pupils' achievements in the AS and A2 exams which together make a full A-level and in vocational equivalents. This gives 120 points for an A-grade at full A-level and 60 at AS-level, dropping to 40 and 20 respectively for an E-grade. Column seven shows the percentage of half-days missed through truancy. NOTE: Some independent schools appear to score zero according to the five A* to C-grade measure. This is because they enter pupils for the International GCSE, which is not recognised by the Department for Children, Schools and Families.
